MN: I like that it's a side table and a drinks table at the same time. This could modernize any room easily.

HW: It would work well in a commercial installation.

MN: This is my favorite piece. I'm buying it for someone after this interview! I'll pair it with antique bronze faucets.

HW: The color is great; I'd mix it with P.E. Guerin faucets that look like rocks. The price works, because it's a good investment—you could be buried in it.

MN: Really pretty, and so usable. I'd place one next to a bedside as a table to stack books on, or use it as a vanity seat.

HW: The shape is great. Architectural and elegant, and it's easy to move.

MN: It feels very Memphis Group. I like that it's sculptural, and the acid yellow could add a great pop to a room.

HW: The yellow glass over white marble is really clever. It's not tall enough for me as a cocktail table, though.

Old-world classicism gets a modern spin for creative, trendsetting Scorpios.

PRODUCED BY ROBERT RUFINO

An Italian neoclassical bust from Newel and a pair of bronze candelabras, a vase inlaid with semiprecious stones, and a contemporary crown sculpture from Maison Gerard sit atop a bronze-and-steel Solaris dining table by Christian Heckscher, available from Studio Van den Akker, in whose showroom this tableau was photographed.

The red-wine glasses and Champagne flutes are by Moser, the water goblets are by Baccarat, the water jug and decanter are by Saint-Louis, the gold chargers and flatware are by Ralph Lauren Home, and the patterned plates are by Penny Morrison. The napkins are by Sferra, the gold salt and pepper shakers are by L'Objet, and the thumbprint dishes are by Elsa Peretti for Tiffany & Co.
